MOUNT VESUVIUS.

The Crand Volcanic Eruption of 1867- "A Pillar of Cloud by Day and a Fillar of NAPLES, Nov. 15.—All summer long, under the bizzing sun, Mount Vesuvius has stood slieht and without a sign of life, like any other great heap of earth and ashes. The few visitors who came here, after the canonization at Rome, in June, despite the prevalence of the choiers, were, of course, disappointed at seeing a mere hill, in no respects differing from other hills when viewed from a distance, instead of the smoking, flaming mountain which pictures of Vesuvius had led them to expect. Rambling through the rules of Pompell and Herculaneum, they were unable to realize how such tremendous havoc could have been caused by so apparently commonplace an elevation as Vesuvius seemed to be. Even when you ascended the mountain itself, and saw the jets of smoke curling beneath your feet, and feit the heat of the ashes, and sincit the sulphuric odors, and looked down the horribiy felt the heat of the ashes, and smelt the sulphuric odors, and looked down the horribly rough, rugged, and ghastly crater. filled with funes and vapors, and suggesting a close connection, through subterranean passages, with the infernal regions, it was not easy to reconcile the appearance of the volcano with what you had read or heard of its magnificence and power. But now Vesuvius is in flames, the earth trambles, and one of the most sublime speciacles on earth is presented to our eyes.

All summer long the veteran guides of Naples

All summer long the veteran guides of Naples have hinted to visitors that an eruption was at hand, basing their predictions upon observations and experiences of which the ordinary tourist can know nothing. But, as usual, these predictions were regarded as mere traps to induce traveliers to stay awhite longer at this most scenic, most jovial, and most enjoyable of Continental cities, and were listened to with incredulous smiles and shakes of the head. When the autumn came the attention of the guides and of everybody else was attracted by another cruption, more interesting then than the predicted outbreak of Vesuvius. Garbaid had declared his crusade against Rome, and the red shirts were again to take the field. Hundreds of gay, laughing Neapolitan, lads turned out to follow their "ader to "Rome or death," and are now slapping forever beneath the grasses of Monte Rotondo and Montana. When the lili-starred crusade was over, fears were entertained by the Government that the returning Garibaldians and their friends at Naples, already disaffected towards the King would at once undertake a revolution, and it was whispered about that Mazzini was on hand to head the movement. In fact, two or three courses did covery but nothing was on hand to head the movement. In fact, two or three emutes did occur, but nothing serious, and the Government had so strengthserious, and the Government had so strengthened the garrison of the city that any rising short of a general revolt of the population could be instantly crushed. So the authorities watched the people, and the people grumbled about Garibaldi's arrest and French intervention, and the strangers hurried away to Rome so soon as the Eternal City was relieved from siege, and nobody thought of Vesuvius, standing sulkfly in the distance, and hardly distinguishable from other aljacent hills.

Last night, however, as if jealous of these

Last night, however, as if jealous of these counter attractions, and tired of its long inaction, the famous voicano suddenly burst forth in a glory of smoke and flame. Everybody was taken by surprise. All Naples was in a state of excitement. Signor Palmieri, the Superintendent of the National Observatory, who ought to have anticipated the enought. who ought to have anticipated the eruption and been upon the spot with his instruments, started at once in haste for the mountain, to record scientifically the progress of the phanomens. He found ten new craters formed, or in course of formation, in and near the great central crater. These new craters are small at present, averaging five or six feet in diamater; but they constantly throw out red-hot stones and cinders, and slowly vomit forth boiling and cinders, and slowly vomit forth boiling lava. The lava now pours into and upon the central crater; when that is filled, it will roll down the side of the mountain, as in the days when Pompell was smothered and Hercula-neum choked out of existence by an eruption es sudden, but much more terrific than this. Mount Vesuvius, you will remember, is about ten miles from Naples, and the mountain proper is about twenty-four hundred feet nigh, ascending by a very gradual slope. But from the top of the mountain, perched nearly in the centre, rises a truncated cone fifteen hundred feet high, and this contains the crater of the volcano. The eruption of 1838 gave the interior of this cone the form of an old-fashioned teaof this cone the form of an old-fashloned tea-cup, the sides varying in thickness from five hundred to forty feet, and the inside being about five hundred feet deep. The present eruption has not yet changed this form, and the new craters have not greatly modified the interior of the cone. At any moment, however, the demon who groans beneath the mountain in his burning bed may transform the whole exterior of Vesuvius.

exterior of Vesuvius.

Such outbreaks as this which we are now per-mitted to observe may be the preliminaries of mitted to observe may be the preliminaries of an immediate eruption on the grandest possible scale, or may die away, after a few weeks, not to be renewed in many months or years. Nobody can tell whether the scenes of 1847, 1850, and 1855 are to be repeated, or whether this is merely a theatrical display, ending harmlessly, and serving only to detain visitors at Naples and attract crowds of tourists. Thus far it presents the combined phenomena of red-hot stones, cinders, and lava. These phenomena are not always coincident. Although there were undoubtedly streams of lava from the voicano in A. D. 79, yet there is no very accurate record of the discharge of liquid lava until 1036. Some eruptions have been accompanied by earthquakes, others have not; but until 1036. Some eruptions have been accom-panied by earthquakes, others have not; but now the earth rumbles beneath the feet of those who visit the mountain, detonations are heard, as from subterranean cannon, and the ground trembles as though it were about to rawn in hideous chasms and swallow up all living things. Only when you pass down from the loose ashes of the cone, across the lack, desciate belts of jagged scoring, and reach the rich, smiling vineyards at the foot of this flery and uneasy monster, does the sense of security return, and even then this sense of security is again dissipated when you glance back at the smoking craters and recollect how far the winds have often carried the fatal showers of mud and ashes that Vesuvius vomits forth. This is the time to visit Pompeli and to inspect what remains of Herculianeum; for in full view, and apparently preparing for another outburs, is the agency which destroyed them. Sodom and Gomorrah were hardly more wicked than the other cities of the plain. Pompeli and Hercul other cities of the plain. Pompell and Herculaneum were certainly not more immoral than modern Naples. Has Providence changed His plans of punishment, or is vice to be dealt with in the old way?

Thinking of this Scriptural parallel recalls perhaps the best description that can be given of the present appearance of Vesuvius. The flames rise like that pillar of fire by night, and the smoke curis upwards like that pillar of cloud by day which led the children of Israel through the wilderness towards the promised land. At night, contrasting grandly with the surrounding gioom, a cone of fire flashes constantly from the crater. The sight is so beautiful, so bewildering, so engrossing, that it was impossible to sleep last evening. Crowds of people were in the streets, or at the windows, or driving upon the Chi ja, watching and commenting upon the display.

As this letter is written early in the morning to catch the quickest mail, the spectacle from to catch the quickest mail, the speciacle from my window is superb. Near Vesuvius the sun my window is superb. Near Vesuvius the sun is rising in a glory of crimson and gold, tinging the paie blue of the morning sky, glowing in the few fleecy clouds that skirt the borizon, and dancing in a thousand prismatic bues upon the calm waters of the beautiful bay. Up from the value of the triple block supply the rolls and the triple block supply a super rolls. the volcano, the thick black smoke rolls in beavy volumes, as though destined to darken the day. No flames are to be seen, for the sau's the day. No flames are to be seen, for the sud's rays have quite eclipsed them now, just as the darkness of the night conceals the smoke and leaves only the cone of the fire visible in its strange, weird beauty. If the reports which have reached us here of tremendous tornadous at the West indies be true, and if the meteoric showers announced by astronomers for last evening were observed in other parts of the simultaneous natural phenomena in some comprehensive theory showing how the operations of nature in one hemisphere are accompanied, supplemented, and completed by occurrences in another hemisphere, just as remote portions of a great and intricate machine are moved by and depend upon each other, so that the same convulsion which causes the storm also occasions the eruption?

A SINGULAR SUICIDE.

A Barber Suspected of Dishonesty Takes Morphine.

The Davenport (Iowa) Gazette of the 23d inst. has the following particulars of the 23d inst. has the following particulars of the suicide at that place of a young Swiss barber, who formerly worked in that city, where he was accused of crime. In consequence of this latter event he killed himself by taking morphine. The Gazette says:—

The Gazette says:—
Yesterday morning a young man, a barber by trade, a native of Switzerland, was found dead in his bed at the residence of Mr. Richard Lichtenheid, his employer, Steffen's building. N. E. corner of Second street and Western avenue. Dr. Tomson, Coroner, was sent for, and the following jury of inquest sworn:—Aug. Juncke, Ph. Englehard, and William A. Scott. Upon examining the coat pockets of the deceased, three letters, written in a plain German hand, were found. One was to his parents, one to his employer, and the other to his cousins living in Wisconsin. The letters are as follows:—

"My Dear Parents, Grandparents, and Relatives:—
After all I take the liberty to inform you, my dear parents, that I suall, this evening, the 21st Novemoer, 1867, put an end to my life. I take the liberty of informing you of this fact, that I do not wish to live any longer; and I would like you all to know I have done no wrong, and do it with a good consciones. Ever since I have been absent from home I have acted as an upright, honest man, and I do not wish you to grieve about it. Adleu, my dears, adleu.

Switzerland, Europe. There was a similar letter addressed to Paulis Kunclert, New Glavis, Green county, Wiscon Also a third, written to a classmate, in ch the author said he had lived long enough, and directing as to the disposal of his enough, and directing as to the disposal of his property.

In the suicide's coat pocket was found a sixty grain bottle (original package) of sulphate of morphine. From this about eighteen grains were missing.

The only reason his employer can assign for the act is the fact that while he was working in Chicago an intoxicated man that he had shaved claimed to have lost his pocketbook, containing a sum of money, and alleged that young Wichser took it. The friendless young barber, although protesting his entire innocence, was arrested and locked up in the Chicago jail, where he was kept for five weeks. There being no evidence against him, the grand jury did not where he was kept for five weeks. There being no evidence against him, the grand jury did not find a bitl of indictment, and he was discharged. This unfortunate affair continued to prey upon his mind, and being of a sensitive nature, he never got over it. Undoubtedly this unjust suspicion drove him to take his own life. His employer and friends here have never doubted bits housely.

THE DISASTER AT LOCKLAND.

Interesting Information about the Misses Morgan-Rare Instances of Devoted Friendship.

From the Louisville Courier, Nov. 27. The four unfortunate Misses Morgan, who were burnt to death by the dreadful accident on the railroad, near Cincinnati, on Thursday morning last, were ladies of education, refinement, goodness, and respectability, and, as we have already stated, daughters of the late Benjamin Morgan, Esq., formerly of the firm of Price & Morgan, merchants in Pulladelpuia, and afterwards President of the Bank of Loui-siana, at New Orleans, and interested in large sugar estates.

At the time Messrs, Price and Morgan disat the time messa, rice and storage dis-solved partnership, they each possessed a nand-some fortune, and they mutually agreed that in case of pecuniary misfortune or loss befalling either of them, the other (if still in good circum-stances) was to share his property with the unfortunate one.

Many years afterwards Mr. Chandler Price failed in Philadelphia, and Mr. Benjamin Morgan transferred to him a fine row of buildings Tchounitoulas street, New Orleans years after, and about the time of Mr. Morgan's death, the latter became much embarrassed by endorsements for his acquaintances. Mr. Price having, in the meantime, accumulated another fortune, after the death of his old partner, reconveyed the same valuable property on Tenoupitonias sirget to Mr. Morgan's children.

This is one of the rare instances, in this life, of faithful, honorable, and undying friendship, and quite as extraordinary as that all four of the daughters should be killed at one fell swo p, a thousand miles from home. For the above facts we are indebted to an esteemed fellow-citizen, who was long an intimate personal friend of Mr. Morgan, and since his death a devoted friend of the family.

Attempts Suicide.

The Kansas State Journal has the following:—
"Mr. W. H. R. Lykins, a prominent banker of this city, who was last year Mayor of this city, and has always been esteemed for his honorable business relations, failed a few weeks since with as ets nominally amounting to $70,000, and lisbilities to the amount of $66,000. He is now laboring under a fit of insanity, from which the worst results are to be apprehended. Yesterday he was on the street in the afternoon General Deitzier, Colonel Learnard, and Mr. Ed. Eldridge called upon him at his house on business. Seeing them approach he fied to his celiar, locked it, and told them they were coming to kill him. They plead with him to come out and come up to the parlor, Finally he came out of the celiar, and seeing bis unfortunate condition, they were compelled to carry him by main force to his parlor, he all the while resisting to his utmost strength. Here he told Mr. Eldridge that he should kill him, that he, Eldridge, had attempted several times to take his life, etc. His wile succeeded in parlially calming him, when at intervals he would say that he knew Mr. Eldridge was his friend, and that all the party were his friends. These semi-lucid intervals would last but a few moments, however, when he would reapse and become perfectly frantic, threatening to take his own life, etc. Dr. Prenties was with him last evening, but up to the present hour of writing but little encouragement could be given of immediate relief while we hope for the best, we fear that his nervous system is so utterly prostrated that doubts may be entertained of his recovery."

FINANCE AND COMMERCE

OFFICE OF THE EVENING TRUEGRAPH, Saturday, Nov. 30, 1887. -Yesterday the stock of the Lebigh Coal and Navigation Company commenced to look up, and closed at 31-a decided advance. There seems to have been no good reason for the sud den fall of its stock, except the series of unpropitious circumstances which surrounded the recent acts of its management. We would not impute the decline to error, so far as the Directors are concerned, but it seems that ordinary caution would have prevented the sudden flooding of the market with the new issue of stock. an event which must be followed by a general breaking up of established prices. But whether the result was due to managerial mistake, or to unavoidable misfortune is not of so much importance to-day. The old President and Board of Directors have wisely tendered their resignations, and the place of President was filled by the election of Edward W.
